

Being forced to purchase broadband DSL from telephone company owned ISP's would diminish choices and lower the service that consumers receive. After being subjected to endless billing errors and receiving unbelievably bad service from the phone company, I switched to an Independent Internet Service Provider. Without regulation, I fear that a large telephone company would once again have a monopoly on the service and abuse it's customers. We need more competition not less.